This is generally not needed for a paper turned in for a class. This is used for manuscripts being submitted to professional journals.
How to Set Up a Cover Page in APA Format

There are a few tools on your word processor that can make preparing your cover letter very simple. These instructions are based on Microsoft Word 2003 or higher. Other word processors may have different methods of producing these effects.

The Header

This first thing you need to have is the header. APA has a very strict format on how the header should be. If you look at this sample here, you will notice that the header on the cover page is different from the header on the second page. On the cover page the header should always read “Running head: SHORT VERSION OF YOUR TITLE IN ALL CAPS” starting on the left margin. The page number goes on the right margin.

The Running Head

In Word, open your header. This can be done either by double clicking in the topmost part of the page or by going to the Insert tab, clicking Header, and choosing Blank. Once in the header section the first thing you need to click is Different First Page.
What this does is allow you to have one header on the first page, which will be your cover page, and another header for the rest of the paper. Once that is clicked, you can put in your running head on the left margin.

The Page Number

The second thing your header needs is the page number. Once you’ve typed in your running head, tab over. It should take two or three tabs and Word will automatically send your cursor to the right margin. There you will insert your page number. It is important to choose the correct one, because several page numbers will delete anything in the header when they are placed. What you want is the one labeled Current Position, then Plain Number. This will put the page number where your cursor is with no lines or fancy markings.

You will have to repeat typing your header for the second page, as it will be blank. The rest of the paper only receives “SHORT TILE IN ALL CAPS” on the left margin and the page number on the right.

The Center

In the center of the cover page you will have three pieces of information on separate, double-spaced lines. On the first line will be your full title. It should be written normally with each word capped except for prepositions, articles, and conjunctions unless they begin the title.
If you have a subheading you may place it on the next line or allow the title to continue on and break normally. The next line should be your name. If it is a group project, it should have all the names separated by commas with an “and” before the final name. The last line is the affiliation. For a paper for class, this is generally the course name, though it can also simply be the school’s full name.

Author Note

As it says in the sample above, for a class assignment an author’s note is not needed unless specifically requested by the teacher. It is used for publications in academic journals. If you need to know more about the author note for submission to an academic journal, please refer to the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association.
